Business: The group's principal activity is to explore and recover the archaeologically sensitive deep-water shipwrecks throughout the world. The group employs advanced state-of-the-art technology including side scan sonar, remotely operated vehicles, or rovs, and other advanced technology, which enables the group to locate and recover shipwrecks at depths that were previously unreachable in an economically feasible manner. The group's projects are conducted in two phases. The search phase is usually conducted from a smaller vessel outfitted with survey equipment and an inspection rove. The recovery phase requires a vessel equipped with a work class rove, both long baseline and usbl acoustic positioning systems and certain odyssey technology and proprietary software, which allows the group to record the recovery in an archaeology sound fashion.

Business: The group's principal activities are the designing and manufacturing of communication products and laser systems. The group operates in two segments: communication product division and electro-optics division: the communication product division develops, manufactures and sells optical fiber-based data communication equipment to both commercial and government clients. The electro-optics division focuses on interferometric fiber optic gyro coils, which are components in rotation-sensing instruments. These instruments replace mechanical and laser gyros in aircraft, missiles, and other vehicles. The group operates in the United States and the United Kingdom.

Business: The group's principal activities are to manufacture and market tight-buffer fiber optic cables for high bandwidth transmission of data, video and audio communications. These cables are sold to the local area network and premises markets. They are used for both indoor and outdoor requirements and utilize a tight-buffered coating process. The group's products can also be used to connect electro-optical hardware components. The products are derived from technology originally developed for military application requiring very rugged flexible and compact fiber optic cables. The customers of the group include distributors, original equipment manufacturers, system integrators, electrical contractors, value added resellers and end-users. The end-users of the product are educational institutions, financial institutions, government agencies, industrial and manufacturing facilities, original equipment manufacturers and the military.

Business: The group's principal activity is to develop, manufacture and market fiber optic sensors and instruments. The group's product is capnoprobe which is a handheld device that is slipped under the tongue like a thermometer that measures the tissue of the mucous membrane in the mouth. The capnoprobe sensor system includes a disposable sensor and a bench top instrument. The optochemically based sensors and its optical platform and software systems can be incorporated into a variety of low-cost, fluid, blood and tissue-contacting measurement systems. These products are used to monitor blood gas for medically unstable patients in critical and intensive care units. The trademarks of the group are capnoprobe(tm) and optical cam(tm).

Business: The group's principal activity is to develop genetic diversity technologies, products and services for genetic biochemistry applications. The products include scoring single nucleotide polymorphism and microfluidics technologies. They are used in drug discovery, principally in the field of pharmacogenetics and dna synthesis. Genetic diversity information is used by the pharmaceutical and medical communities to facilitate the development of highly specific and efficacious drugs, to improve the effectiveness of existing drugs and to increase the likelihood of success of tissue transplants. The group's proprietary technologies are also used in other commercial applications outside the healthcare field including forensics, paternity testing, improved crop development and livestock breeding programs.

Business: The company's principal activities are the design, development, manufacture and sale of data access systems mainly to telephone companies and private network operators. These systems facilitate high-speed digital transmission of voice, text, data and images over the existing installed base of twisted copper wire lines. Its main product is a digital subscriber line multiplexor system (DSLAM) based on asymmetric technology (ADSL). The company is also involved in the design of telecom equipment targeting metro areas based on emerging resilient packet ring technology. These products provide optimized high-speed packet transmission of data and voice traffic over fiber ring networks in metro areas.

Business: The company's principal activity is the operation of gold mines in and around the town of alleghany in the California. The company markets rare high-grade gold and quartz specimens at a premium to museums, collectors and jewelry manufacturers. The main operating site is the sixteen to one mines. Many modern mining technologies are deployed in these mines to ensure effective extraction of gold. The mines are made available to third parties for research and development, which allows the company to benefit from the same without incurring the usual cost associated with research. The company also manufactures its own jewelry and sells its own proprietary mine bars.

Business: The company's principal activities are to conduct research and development of tissue engineered skin regeneration product, for use in the treatment of chronic and acute wounds. The group has developed a proprietary and patented technology known as orcel, which is used to stimulate the repair and regeneration of human skin. Orcel is a two layered tissue engineered dressing that consists of human derived skin cells, both dermal and epidermal, supported within a porous collagen matrix. The composite matrix is seeded with keratinocytes for epidermal growth and fibroblasts for dermal growth. The company also conducts a pivotal clinical trial for the use of orcel in its cryopreserved form for the treatment of venous leg stasis and diabetic foot ulcers.

Business: The company's principal activities are to develop, manufacture and market proprietary orthopedic products. These products are designed to promote the healing of musculoskeletal tissue, with particular emphasis on fracture healing and spinal repair. The products are designed to enhance the healing of diseased, damaged, degenerated or recently repaired musculoskeletal tissue. The products improve the clinical outcomes and cost-effectiveness of orthopedic procedures that are characterized by compromised healing, high-cost, potential for complication and long recuperation time. The product line includes bone growth stimulation and fracture fixation devices. These products are sold primarily through the company's direct sales force supplemented by regional distributors. On Nov 26, 2003 the group sold bone growth stimulation device business to dj orthopedics, llc. It is in the process of developing and testing our chrysalin(R) product platform.

Business: The group's principal activity is to provide online retailing activities. The group offers closeout, brand-name merchandise for sale over the Internet. Closeout merchandise is typically available in inconsistent quantities and prices and often is only available to consumers after it has been purchased and resold by disparate liquidation wholesalers. The group's warehouses purchase large bulks of inventory from these liquidation sales of residual products and make direct and indirect sales. The group's merchandise offering includes bed-and-bath goods, kitchenware, watches, jewelry, electronics, sporting goods and designer accessories.
